Purification and characterization of the aryl sulfotransferases in human lung. Aryl sulfotransferase activity was measured in microsomal fraction of lung obtained from patients who underwent various pulmonary surgical procedures. Sulfation of the test substrates, p-nitrophenyl sulfate and 2-(4-methyl-phenylazo) benzoic acid, was linear with time up to 2 min. The activity for these substrates was highest in the tissue from patients who had had a lobectomy. Two forms of aryl sulfotransferase activities were detected: one sensitive to sodium bisulfite and the other insensitive to this reagent. The latter form (sensitive to sodium bisulfite) was purified, characterized, and shown to be aryl-alkyl sulfotransferase.Q: How is module construction in Python? What is the rule?

Here are two ways of creating the same module. In the first one, the names are printed out in python (Output is printed to standard output). In the second one, the names are just assignments. (But it is shown in the doc. What is the difference between the two?) Why is the first way not the best practice? What are the benefits and drawbacks of the second way. # First Way >>> import sys >>> from string import ascii_letters >>> print(sys.modules.__dict__['ascii_letters'].__doc__) # Second Way >>> import sys >>> from string import ascii_letters >>> sys.modules['ascii_letters'] = ascii_letters >>> print(
